ing a low, straight ball, he landed on the flat just before the shandoned first green, while Travis took the higher ground and secured a good tee for his second shot. Attempting to draw the ball too fine he went out of bounds and dropped another, with the usual penalty of stroke and distance. It was the first indication of the nervousness which later told so heavily against his game. He was on the green in 3, however, while Douglas, who struck the face of the hill leading up to the green. followed in the like. Travis overran the cup, and as his opponent lay dead he gave up the hole. The second hole is merely a cleck shot of 175 yards, crossing a wide ravine and reaching the main to the clubhouse. Both were over from the tee, Douglas having somewhat the worse of the position forty yards from the hole. He missed a long put for 2, and the hole was halved in 3.

Facing the third, a carry of 234 yards, Douglas pulled the ball over by the roadway and landed close to the fence that he was obliged to play Travis cleared the bunker, but his attempt was misjudged, and Douglas, who had reached the green on his third, was able to halve The fourth hole crosses the railroad track, and runs over a beautiful piece of turf to a green near the woods. There was nothing to choose ween the two drives from the tee, but in playing his iron Travis landed far to the right and overran the green on his third. Douglas used a brassey, carried the bunder and was on the green Coming back, Travis made a wretched ap proach, and, as Douglas was dead on his third, Travis gave up the hole. The latter had the best of the argument from the next tee, and followed up his success by landing his brassey well on the green. Douglas was too strong on his second, overrunning the green and getting into the rough. Play ing the odd, he was three feet away, while Travis was short on the like. Douglas then missed a short

From the sixth tee it was Douglas who had the best of the drives. Travis got into a cuppy lie, and after addressing with his drives wisely, changed the club for a brassey and made a capita shot. Douglas laid his brassey on the green, and playing the like, Travis followed with a miserable approach that went skimming past the cup. The the hole went to Douglas at 4 to 5.

Coming now to the seventh there was little to choose between the two drives. Travis attempted a brassey, was short and the ball landed on the followed one of the prettiest shots of the day. With his brassey Douglas sent a low hall skimlaid himself a stymie, and gave up the hole. The score was now 3 up in Douglas's favor. It was laid himself a stymie, and gave up the hole. The score was now 3 up in Douglas's favor. It was evident to those who had seen him play against Foxhall Keene on the previous day that Travis had lost the control which made his game so brilliant at that time. His putting was not of that confident kind, that comes off with the casy swing of assured success, which is usually the only putting that is effective, while his driving was noticeably poor. Possibly it was Douglas's reputation that caused the nervousness, but it should be remembered that Travis's recent illness had lefthim in weakened condition physically, and doubtless the strain of the previous day had told on him more than people thought. The cighth hole makes for a green at the bottom of a steep declivity, and down the hill Travis went bumping, with his iron and reached the sandpit beyond. Douglas focaled his iron and stopped at the top of the ridge. From here he made a well directed shot that landed him safely on the green. The next stroke was a pretty one. Travis took his mashle, and with a short, clean chop had the ball dead for the hole. Douglas missed the chance to halve in four, and Travis got the hole. On the ninth hole Travis was short in his drive, short again on his fron, but recovered on his brassey and laid the ball green high. Douglas was on the green in three and a half in five resuited. As the men rounded the turn, therefore, Douglas led by 2 up.

On the return journey Travis got the tenth, lost the next and the twelfth and thirteenth were halved. Travis the reverted up matters by taking the two following holes in three each—capital going—but he lest the sixteenth, and as the last two were halved the morning play ended with Doug-

Meanwhile, Macdonald and Smith were having a hot match. It is a curious coincidence that Macdonald, who was beaten in the semi-finals of last year's championship by Betts, of Yale, should have heen put out in the same round yesterday by another sturdy Yale man. Smith had a strong clique of college boys in the gallery, and John Reid, fr., of last spring's championship team, acted as his coach and caddle, while Harry Holbrook, ir., was fore caddie. Macdonald had as his caddle David Foulls, the Chicago professional, who accompanied him Last especially for the tournament. The Yale man lost the toas for the honor, and his opponent drove off. Smith sent one of his terrific strokes, and carried to the foot of the green. He was dead for the cup in four, and won the hole. Smith has a way of letting out his shoulders and swinging full on the hall that carries a grand stroke. Almost his only error in the morning play was the twelfth hole, where he got into every bunker and took 10 for the hole. Even then he came in with 45 for the journey, ending 3 up on his opponent. The cards of the forenon half were:

There is a strong desire manifested by two of the leading racing clubs to appoint their own starter, judges and salaried officials. Then there is a possiactive, vigorous men, who either own thorough-breds or intend to purchase them, at its head, and who are firmly determined to dispense with old fogyism and to give the public racing on a sportsmanlike basts.

with two yearlings by Dobbins that are trained by John E. Elliott at the Gravesend track. These youngsters were bred by Mr. Croker, and if their trials are satisfactory they will be freely entered in the principal stakes to be run for heat year.

There is a general belief that the turf is affected with the "yellows" and that the tree that produces some of the "peaches" that have caused so much anguish and distress to the best friends of racing requires pruning by an unsparing hand.

August Belmont is expected home, and he may possibly call a meeting of the stewards of the Jockey Club, and endeavor to reconcile the statements of Jockeys and trainers with the cold facts witnessed by the public which patronizes racing.

No. Il of Goodwin's Official Turf Guide is out and contains a complete record of the races run this year up to Tuesday, the lith of the present month. Every racegoer should possess a copy, as it is indispensable to everybody who desires up-to-date information about turf affairs.

Adolph Neison is exceedingly popular among turfmen. He and his partners are extremely popular and highly esteemed among other classes in addition to turfmen. Nelson & Co's restaurant and cafe, at No. Is Certilandt-st., have been for many years in high flavor with New-Yorkers, and also with people from New-Jersey and elsewhere. The rooms are on the direct route to and from the great Cortlandt-st. ferry. The restaurant and cafe have been refuted and redecorated and they are now even more attractive than ever before.

F. O'Hanlon, the assistant sceretary of the Jockey Club, sent word to the newspaper offices has night that he had received the following additional subscriptions for the mother of Jockey Barrett, who sustained injuries from which he died, while riding last week: James R. Keene, $150; W. H. Dubots, $5.

 Time 2:32, 2:314, 2:324,

Plattsburg, N. Y., Sept. 16 (Special).—The track record of 2:11 was broken at the fair grounds this afternoon by Dan Q. in the free-for-all, trotting the first heat without urging in 2:10%, the second heat in 2:12. Rain prevented further racing, and the contest will be concluded to-morrow afternoon. In the 2:20 pace Annie Lepburn won first money, Dick
